Customer Reviews

I bought this board book for my sister who is pregnant and decided to add another of the "Hello, World" series, after seeing how cute this one is. The illustrations are absolutely adorable - it's not often that you find such beautiful stylized art in a children's book. The only thing is, the parent reader will need to brush up on a few French words (patisserie, Louve, etc) before attempting to read this out loud to their child ;) The physical quality of the book is great, too - the board pages are thick and high quality.

These books are amazing. There are plenty of books about colors/shapes and plenty of books about Paris/New York, but this series highlights features of each city that you may not know unless you've visited and experienced it! The illustrations are super creative ways to teach your little one the baby basics. My little one absolutely loves going through the pictures with me, and I love rehashing through memories from some of my favorite cities! Paris is a really lovely book in the series - charming like the city itself.

Such fun to read to my toddler! I bought the whole series. He is at just the perfect age to learn his colors and numbers. Soon he'll be ready for shapes and opposites. So glad I bought these books. I highly recommend them.

I am so very pleased with this book for little people about shapes and about Paris, too. It is terrific and our little fellow has enjoyed looking it over and over again. The illustrations are really nice and this is an excellent teaching tool that is fun. Good stuff. Keep it up.

We LOVE these books! The entire Hello World series is a must-have for any child's library! Each book is full of eye-catching, beautiful illustrations, and unforgettable lessons to educate your little one. Who says a toddler shouldn't be able to identify some of the world's most iconic structures, all while being taught fundamental basics of shapes, numbers, etc.? These books are sure to be a timeless success in the world of children's books.

I bought this gift for a child's first birthday and let me just say it's more than what I expected. It's the perfect size for small hands, had wonderful artwork and colors, and is great for a child to look at on their own or have a parent read to them.

I am lucky that my son loves books, but after reading the words moo baa laa 900 times, sometimes your mind drifts off to Paris. Then to my surprise I found these amazing children's books that could teach my son while reminding me of the good old European days (pre children). This book is bright and colorful and shows all the landmarks of Paris while incorporating shapes. I recommend the whole collection!

It's nice that you can teach shapes and have them learn about local monuments, but this whole 'Hello World' series just seems...lacking... leaving something to be desired. There's just not enough content and they're too short. The pictures and colors are pretty and eye-catching, but have you ever read a book that's like three words and then over? That's what these feel like. There's board books like, Baby bear sees blue and The little house, that just feel more substantial and are actually cheaper. I don't know. Maybe I'm just cheap. Or maybe this book shouldn't be $8.
