Customer Reviews

Note: this review is from a post on my blog, www.NavdeepSinghDhillon.com. This When Derek Taylor Kent, the bloke who wrote the Scary School Middle Grade series, asked me if I was interested in reviewing his picture book, El Perro Con Sombrero, I was immediately intrigued. The title told me everything I needed to know for me to want this book not to suck: it stars a dog with a sombrero, a villain cat, and it's bilingual Spanish? Double in! First, let's talk about the facts of the book industry. It has not had a great dog protagonist since "Old Yeller." And what happens to him at the end? The poor sod dies. A disturbing modern trend is to portray cats exclusively as noble protagonists when they clearly make fantastic villains, like in the Russian satirical novel, Master and Margarita, in which the cat, a devil incarnate named Behemoth, is mad about guns, vodka, and has the most hilarious lines. I probably didn't take away from the novel what I was supposed to take away from it when I read it the first time. In my defense, I was thirteen. When I read it a few years ago, I was terrified and couldn't finish it. On that delightful note, let's get back to this picture book for children. The story of "El Perro Con Sombrero" is beautifully simple and it has a moral at the end of it. I'm not big on morals, but if it's there and it's not cheesy I'm down with it. I like stories that are entertaining, but in this story the moral worked and it wasn't overly pleasant. Jed Henry's artwork is a nice blend of mostly watercolor drawings with some digitized artwork and a distinctive old school style. Now for the plot: a hatless dog is poor, hungry, and sad.
