Customer Reviews

I initially didn't intend to review this, because it's not a book with real content, but I figured I might as well since I did read it and have an opinion on it. I probably would have liked the idea of this book if I'd been a kid who was into the show. I always really enjoyed prompted activity journal things, and this book gives you the opportunity to list opinions and draw creative little replies to the prompts. But I think some of the prompts are kind of unrealistic, and I'm not sure how many kids are, say, going to tape photographs into this book, write songs about overheard phrases from their lives, or go on a full-blown day-long scavenger hunt to find some of the difficult items on a list. That said, I think this was the first tie-in book that established fonts and colors for each of the main characters, and those standards were later used in additional materials that tied into the show. Steven has a cute child-print font in pink talk bubbles. Garnet's got the bold, blocky print with red bubbles, Amethyst's got the messy writing with flair in purple bubbles, and Pearl's got practical, thin text in blue-green bubbles. I like the consistency, and the cute art of the characters commenting on your hypothetical input. None of the art for this book appears to be newly created for it; it's all screenshots from the show, and that's a little disappointing, but it's to be expected. And it does have consistency for the characters' outfits; Pearl's is always post-regeneration, and Amethyst and Garnet are pre-regeneration (even though the book was released well after Garnet and Amethyst had reformed).
